In perusing these speeches those who have read the APPEAL for the past three months will recognize an old acquaintance. Governor Tilden said:

"Everybody knows that after the recent and no less to every man of the minority will the ultimate consequences extend. Evils in government grow by success and by impunity; they do not arrest their own progress; they can never be limited except by external forces. If the men in possession of the gov-ernment can in one instance maintain themselves in power against an adverse decision at an election, such an example will be conloned. But temptation exists always, and devices to give color of law and false pretenses on which to ground fraudulent decisions will not be wanting, and the wrong will world's history changes in the succession of governments have usually been the result of raud or force. It has been our faith and our pride that we had established a mode of peace-ful change to be worked out by the agency of the ballot-box. The question now is, Whether our elective system, in its substance as well as its form, is to be maintained? This is the question of questions, politics founded on the inferior rights of the people. It involves the elective principle; it involves the whole system of a popular government. The people must signally con-demn the great wrong which has been done of the waters. The change of current would, to them; they must strip the example of he believes, form a sand-bank in the still everything that car attract imitators; they water below the jetty, thus adding to the senust refuse a prosperous immunity to crime. Their conduct, since their nominations at St. Louis twelve months ago, has been faultless. Not only the Democratic party, but the American people at large may be well proud of the way in which they have borne themselves. With great provocation, and smarting under a sense of a gross and infamous wrong, they nevertheless speak with the dignity of statesmen and patriots who have an abiding faith in the people, and a belief that "truth is omnipotent and public justice certain." The Democratic party has abundant cause to be proud of Samuel J. Tilden ever since his election last November.
